

Brett Sensitivity

Determine your sensory sensitivity to the defects caused by Brettanomyces at the Vinquiry Enartis neutral-environment, sensory laboratory. During each 1 hour testing session, participants will be individually evaluated for their lowest level sensitivity to a 4-ethylphenol (4EP) and 4-ethylguaiacol (4EG) mixture, the main contributors to the Brett aroma. Each person will perform a series of triangle tests using a neutral red wine containing from 150 to 600 parts per billion of 4EP/4EG. Sensory sensitivity certificates will be rewarded to each participant, specifying their individual sensitivity for 4EP/4EG.

Quantifying Brett sensitivity levels is important to identify individuals that are able to recognize the aroma most commonly associated with Brettanomyces. Winemakers, cellar masters and production staff can be used for quality control in a Brett screening program or to identify potential Brett contamination in the winery. Tasting room staff can also benefit by learning how to describe the Brett aroma more adequately to consumers.

Testing must be done in an odor free environment, therefore please do not wear perfume or any other strong odors.
